A useful pamphlet compiled from the annual review of the Commercial and Financial Chronicle, containing a series of tables of the fluctuations in gold, stocks, exchange, and Government securities from 1863 to 1868 inclusive, with a variety of other financial informaon condensed into a small compass, is published by William B. Dana & Co.

Onward, Capt. Mayne Reid's new venture in the magnaine line, continues to be chiefly written by his own hand, although it manages to escape the monotony ch might be anticipated from such a bold application of the "one-man power," He proposes, however, to arrangement for the future, and to admit productions of the "native pen," which, we apprehend, are by no means certain to improve the quality of the work. At present, the crowded pages of "Onward" do not disappoint the expectations awakened by the brilliant coloring and hopeful emblems of its exterior.

The April number of the Brooklyn Monthly rustains the promise with which that new-born periodical has just entered upon its career. It contains a blographical sketch of the eminent Episcopal divine, the Rev. Dr. Littlejohn, who has not long since been elected to the office of Bishop of Long Island. "Roorbacks and the Lake" gives a counte description of geme of the famous hoaxes which have been played off on sundry asute newspaper editors, generally for the sake of political effect. A large space in the number is devoted to fiction, and a copious supply of artistic and literary mat-

The Eclectic Magazine (E. R. Pelton) continues to furnish a well selected miscellany from the abundant stores of English periodical literature. The April numer contains several noteworthy papers, including a personal sketch of Neander, with an estimate of his character as a theologian and a historian of the church; an ute critical discussion of the "Modern Element in Literature," to which the name of the writer, Matthew Arnold, will attract attention; several pieces of popular tion; and one or two scientific papers of considerable interest. One might put his leisure hours to far worse uses than dipping into the pages of this excellent collection of choice literature.

A new and beautiful volume on architecture, entitled Woodward's National Architect, by GEO. E. WOODWARD and EDWARD G. THOMPSON, forms an appr priate sequel to the previous valuable works of Mr. Woodward on the same subject, furnishing the owners of real estate with a variety of suggestions in regard erection of desirable houses on their premises. to the wants of the great mass of the American people, with elevations, estimates, and specifications in a shape tails as will enable one to ascertain the cost in his own locality by a comparison of prevailing prices. The forms of the designs, so that final estimates can be obtained from local builders. The drawings are not only of elegant execution, but so clear in their details, and so complete in their illustrations, as to take the piace of a large amount of descriptive matter.

The Edinburgh Review (The Leonard Scott ng Co.), although falling far short of its renown in the palmy days of Jeffrey, Sydney Smith, and Mackin tosh, or its revival under the brilliant contributions of Macaulay and Carlyle, still holds a high rank among the British quarterlies, and should not fail to be kept up with by the lovers of good literature in this country. In the number, the articles of most interest to readers on this side of the water are the papers on John Bright and President Grant, each of which is written for the most part with a sound knowledge of the subject, and a just appreciation of the state of affairs in what may properly now be called "New America." The criticisms on General Grant's military career may pass for what they are worth, and the tone of skepticism, or suspended judgment, with which the writer brings his speculations to a close, will ot command universal sympathy. Mr. Bright's relations to the American question are very fairly put in the following paragraphs.

Hright's opinions have throughout been largely i by analogies drawn from America. The example tinged by analogies drawn from America. The example of that powerful Republic seems to have early captivated his fancy, and impressed his judgment. The spectacle of that thriving community with no aristocracy, no standing army, no established church, no debt, light taxation, and a rapidly increasing population, struck ing army, no established church, no debt, agat taxation, and a rapidly increasing population, struck him as in vivid contrast to the state of things at home.
America therefore had for many years been his favorite theme, in enforcing his views for the amelioration of our own condition; and probably nothing so much tended to diminish ais weight, and injure his popularity with the more Conservative section of the Liberal party, than his constantly recurring praises of a community see extremely unlike our own. The American Civil War, howevercoming as it did with the suddenness of light, ning, introduced a new and unexpected element into this favorite comparison. The once pacific States were deluged with the blood of American citizens, which the hands of citizens had shed. That republic, where standing armies had been unknown, maintained on either side for four years more than half a million of men under arms. No war recorded in history had been so deadly. The horrors which Mr. Bright had so vividly depicted during the Russian war were magnified tenfold on American soil; and American finance presented the spectacle of a debt, scarcely loss burdensome than our own, and accumulated in the space of five years.

Mr. Bright look the side of the North; and we have in magnified tenfold on American son, and American sin successful to the space of five years.

Mr. Bright took the side of the North; and we have in these volumes seven of his most elaborate speeches delivered on that subject. They are all worth perusing, especially from the light which subsequent events have cast upon them. In some respects Mr. Bright has just cause of complacency in this retrospect. His line was consistent throughout, and he has some reason to say, that opinions which were not popular at the time, are now to a large extent accepted as sound and true. He is right in asserting that the sympathy of some of our public men turned too unguardedly to the South, as the weaker party contending for independence. He is right in assing that the press was premature and indiscrect in hastily assuming that the South would succeed. His own prognostics on that subject have been thoroughly verified. He was rightin warning Mr. Laird, and the builders of blockade-tunners, against their questionable occupation; and in the present state of negotiations on that subject, it is not easy to deny that he was right in urging a more rigorous application of the law. In these matters time has proved him to be right, and the presence in the Cabinet of one who has held and maintained these views, will be an additional guarantee to the United States of the desire of the Government to meet them in a fair and conciliatory spirit.

Another merit Mr. Bright may fairly claim. His constant and reiterated allusions to America, although they have been in a large measure distasteful even to the Liberal party, have yet compelled us to do justice to America and her institutions. There was much which was really deserving of admiration in their conduct during the war, even when judged by those whose general sympathy was given to their opponents. Their general reverence for law and the independence of their judges, deserve all praise; and in the highest, their conduct was highminded and states manlike.

The Westminster Review (The Leonard Scott Publishing Co.) for the present quarter, among other interesting papers, has an extended notice of the new edition of Richardson's "Clarissa," reviving the memory of a favorite novel of our great-grandmothers which has almost been crowded out of sight since the appearance upon the stage of Sir Walter Scott, Bulwer, Dickens, Thackeray, and other great masters of fiction The claim of Richardson to be ranked among the greatest imaginative writers was conceded without a dissentient voice by the critical judgment of the last century, and by the unanimous suffrage of the prominent French writers. On this point, an interesting anecdote is related by the editor of the novel. "Pacing up and down the library of the Athenseum Club together, Macaulay and Thackeray came to talk of Richardson's masterpiece. The great novelist asked the great historian whether he had ever read it. 'Not read "Clarissa!" cried out Macaulay; 'if you once thoroughly entered on "Clarissa," and are infected by it, you can't leave it. When I was in India I passed one hot season at the hills, and there were the Governor-General and the Secretary of Government and the Commander-in-Chief, and their wives. I had "Clarissa" with me, and as soon as they began to read it, the whole station was in a passion of excitement about Miss Harlow and her misfortunes and her scoundfelly Lovelace! The Governor's wife seized the book, and the Secretary waited for it, and the Chief-Justice could not read it for tears!" A review of Mr. Bright's speeches gives a discriminating estimate of the rank of that eminent man as a statesman and a parliamentary orator. The following remarks on his American speeches will be read with deep interest:

From Mr. Bright's speeches on the condition of Ireland we puss to those on America, in whose mighty and hospitable boson so many millions of the outcast sons of Ireland have found shelter and a home, and the means of honorable independence; in the story of whose prosperity all the lovers of freedom throughout Europe have found consolation and hope in the darkest hours of oppression and wrong, and from whose immense, inevitably increasing greatness, none can now divine how much of the future history of mankind will be developed. The speeches which Mr. Bright delivered during the long-continued and painful suspense in which all lovers of justice and humanity were kept during the time that the battle of Slavery and Freedom was being fought out in America with dreadful but unavoidable carnage, must be regarded as the most magnificent and powerful in these volumes. Admirable as are his other efforts of oratory here garnered up, these speeches surpass them, and are equal to the majesty of the subject, and still thrilling with all the authority of that suspendous conflict. The grandeur of the United States—the cruel agonies of that unrivaled Commonwealth, of that willing fostermother of the hunger-driven furtheres of Europe, and now of the slave of Africa—were in themselves sufficient topics for elequence; but the pain and grief with which Mr. Bright witnessed the daily apostasy of most of the cultivated classes from the principles of Christianity, and the general and gnoble remnaclation of all further care for the stailless legacy of the Wilberforces and the Clarksons—the suppressed indiguation with which he was compelled daily to endure the expression of hopes and sympathies with that menstrous power which dared in the face of heaven and the nineteenth century to declare Slavery to be a that monstrous power which dared in the face of heaven and the nineteenth century to declare Slavery to be a divine institution, for the white as well as for the black-which aimed at establishing a new empire, with Slavery as its foundation, and blood for its baptism—gave additional pathos and sublimity to his emotions, and armed all the might of the vehement soul of the orator, and called forth the noblest impulses of a great and justice-loving heart. loving heart.

The limitations of Mr. Darwin's theory of the "Origin of Species," are strikingly set forth in a paper which does justice to the boldness and conscientiousness of that great philosophical naturalist.

The mind certainly recoils from the attempt to realize The mind certainly recoils from the attempt to realize numbers so great and minuteness so excessive as are implied in this hypothesis of the gemmular constitution of the organism, but as matter must be assumed to be infinitely divisible, and as we know that practically in the case of odoriferous bodies and infectious diseases, the particles given off must be inconceivably minute, whilst in the latter they possess a power of self-reproduction within the body almost precisely analogous to that claimed by Mr. Darwin for his genumules, we must agree with him in thinking that the difficulty of conceiving the existence of gemmules so numerous and so small has each of this weight as an argument against his hypoth.

It is evident that, unless we accept the notion of supernatural interference in every case, some such hypothesis as this must be adopted to account for the transmission of constitutional peculiarities from parents to their off-spring, across a bridge narrower even than that which according to Mahometan tradition conducts the Faithful into Paradise. Of the defects and shortcomines of this "provisional hypothesis" no one, probably, is more conscious than its gifted author himself—his whole theory, fruitful as it has been in results and brilliant as is the light it throws upon many of the most secret operations of Nature, brings us at last face to face with questions which the human intellect will, perhaps, nover be able to answer, and we can fully sympathize with Mr. Darwin in the mournful feeling, leading almost to a wall of despair, with which he finally, as it were, lets fall the partially raised veil as the inscrutable Fate-phantom advances upon him from its ambush behind the revealed portion of the majestic Temple of Nature.

Mr. Lexitas—Doter Sir.; We are very much pleased with the 30-horse power Patent Boller recently made by you for us, it does not consume as much coal, though having far more work, as did a 10-horse power boller formerly used by us, and we are assisted that we are doing the same work with it as a not upon other bollers of like steam-power, at a saving of 40 to 50 per cent in the amount of each used. It will pay for itself in this way soon. We shall be glad to show it in operation to any one increased. Yours truly.

Mr. H. Lexits—Sir: Your Patent Boller, 40-horse power, I purchased of you far exceeds my expectations; it gives all the steam required for a 40-horse engine, and does not consume but one half the feel of a 10-horse power boller I formerly used. I believe it to be the best, safest, and most economical in use today.

Mr. H. Lerlie-Sir: I am very much pleased with the Leslie Patent Boiler I purchased from you, for the steaming Steens: if ar exceeds my expectations. The boiler I had previous to purchasing your Patent Boiler was one similar to these in use on most of the river steamers, and all the a good boiler; if consumed 15 tims of coal per week. Now, your Beiler is giving all the steam required, using only 7 tims of coal per week; so you see! so you want to all those who are in want of hotlers, that the Leslie Patent Boiler I believe to be the best boiler now in use, both for economy not affety.

Pacific Mail opened at 894, selling at 914, closing at 201. The short interest in the stock is large, and it is reported that a strong movement has been inaugurated to advance the price upon the shorts. The loss of the steamer Hermann entails but a trifling loss upon the Company. Her original cost was about $30,000, and her value has been marked down to $10,000 on the Company's books. Railway shares were strong, considering the active demand for money. At the opening of business, New-York Central sold at 159, afterward rallying to 160½, selling afterward at 159≨ ⊕160½, closing at 150½. Reading sold at 91; Michigan Southern, 95½. North-Western shares were steady at 83 283 for the Common, and 91 292 for the Preferred stock. St. Paul stocks were one half lower. Fort Wayne was firm at 123@1234. Rock Island sold at 1304@1314. Lake Shore and Cleveland and Toledo sold at 106 2100; Delaware, Lackawanna and Western, 114; Hannibal and St. Joseph, 1174. The market was dull, cks, with the exception of New-York Central and Pacific Mail. At the close, prices were lower, and the market unsettled.

Money continued in active demand at 7 per cent, coln. both upon Government bonds and railway shares. The stringency was assisted by the continued calling in of loans by the banks, who were drawn upon for large amounts by their country correspondents, who are placing themselves in a strong position for the April settlements. In many cases borrowers paid a per cent on currency interest, but this was an extreme price. The present supply of loanable funds here is sufficient to transact business if there were no undue effort to exact high rates, but as usual at this season of the year, when the demand for business purposes takes all the surplus funds in the market, it is comparatively easy for a few large lenders to get high rates for their money by declining to lend unless paid a commission in addition to legal rates. The demand continued until after the close of bank hours, and the market closed sharp at 7 per cent,

MILCH COWS—With a considerable increase in numbers, the only change in the market is due to the fact that a few very superfor milkers have been sent here for sale. One extra native cow and calf brought $140, while two fancy Ayrshires were sold for $400. Still the bulk of the cows go at $75 a $85, decent animals selling at $80 each, with poor as low as $40, and very few ever $90.

VEAL CALVES—Live calves are not coming forward as fast as expected—600 less than for the corresponding week last year. There is a greater variation in price, with a larger proportion selling at low rates, viz. 8 21c. Fat calves bring 12 a 32c., and occasionally 134c. for an extra animal. Dressed go off readily at 16 21c. for prime, and 17 238c. for a few very choice. They run down below loc. for the poorest.

SHEEP,—We report the first sheared sheep of the season, some farmers not having the fear of Henry Bergh before their eyes. The weather has been unfavorable for stock deprived of their Winter clothing. The fact is it is too early to shear sneep, Arrivals of 22,159 head are 1,000 greater than last week, but they are not all selling. Including some lots holding from last Thursday, there are 40 cars, or rising 7,80c head on the market this morning, viz., 23 cars at Communipaw, 14 cars at Forlicth-8t. and 3 cars at Hudson City. Prices are about as last reported, viz. 6 27 fc. for very common to searcely medium; Sw3c. for fair to prime, and 9 fc. for extras, with a few still higher. At Communipaw there was a dead-lock. The sheep cost high, while the meat markets are not encouraging for butchers. N hoof was sold up to 2 o'clock, and the game appears be to see who would hold out the longest—buyer or se Those at Hudson City were not sold in the early parthe day, though 6c. was offered for a car 74 h cin sheep. A car 68 h State sheared sheep was sold on urday for 51c.
